Jupiter rises at the close of the month about 10 o'clock. Saturn is morning star, and ranks fourth in importance on the monthly roll, though his path is marked by no incident of interest. This grand member of the solar family is steadily coming nearer, and has so far advanced towards his nearest approach or opposition, that at the end of the month his serene face will come glowing above the horizon at eight o'clock, to be followed two hours later by the more imposing mien of Jupiter. For two months to come the two planets, though not near in reality will be inseparably linked in the attention of the observer, who will gladiy welcome their appearance in the evening sky, though they are still included in the list of morning stars. Saturn now rises a few minutes before ten o'clock in the evening; at the close of the month he rises a few minutes before eight o'clock. Although the making of a new nose for a person deprived of his natural organ of smelling has been often undertaken with success, it is a nice and difficult operation; an attempt just made in Vienna by Professor Billroth, one of the most distinguished surgeons of Austria, to supply a soldier who had been frightfully mutilated in Bosnia, with an artificial nose, has attracted much attention. The material for the new organ was taken from the skin of the forehead. The operation is reported to have been entirely successful, and with a supplementary shaping process, is expected to result in a nose that cannot be distinguished from a natural one.

A new submarine torpedo boat has been constructed on the shores of Stockholm harat will, can return into harbor, keeping below the surface. THE EARLY MORNING .- The sky in the early morning now presents a charming picture, the beautiful scene amply repaying the early riser for the effort required in order to witness it. Saturn leads the starry host as he mounts to the meridian. He is almost in line with the glimmering Pleiades, while ruddy Aldebaran glows below him. The princely Jupiter appears farther north than his brother planet, heralded by the brilliant Ca-pella, and followed by the mighty Orion. It is seldom that the planets are attended by a court of such eminent rank, and every lover of the stars should behold the fascinating spectacle at least
